10 Gaming [...]

Then there will be problem-solving games: there are already a lot of games in which scientists try to teach gamers real science - how to build proteins to cure cancer, for example. [...] we'll see increasing collaboration, people playing games together to solve problems while they're enjoying themselves. [...]

As the web goes mobile, those who pay more will get faster access. We will be sharing videos, simulations, experiences and environments, on a multiplicity of devices to which we'll pay as much attention as a light switch. [...]

15 Sport [...]

Sport will have to respond to new technologies, the speed at which we process information and apparent reductions in attention span. [...] The demands of TV will grow, as will technology's role in umpiring and consuming sport. Electronics companies are already planning broadcasts using live holograms. [...]
