Brazilian Folklore

Folklore is an English word that means popular wisdom: folk = people (povo) + lore = wisdom (sabedoria). August is the month of folklore. This is when we celebrate the rites, traditions, popular wisdom, dances, and festivities in Brazil. The date is celebrated on August 22nd.

What do you know about Saci, Yara, Boto Cor de Rosa, Curupira and Mula sem cabeça?

What about Boitatá, Quibungo, Cabeça de Cuia, Lobisomem?

Let's meet 5 of these creatures!

Mula sem Cabeça

This folkloric character is a headless mule that spits fire from its neck. The Mula sem Cabeça is a very popular tale of Brazilian Folklore. According to the legend, the mule runs through the woods and fields, scaring people and animals.

Boto Cor de Rosa

According to the legend, a pink dolphin comes out of the Amazon rivers at night during Festas Juninas (June Festivities). With its special power, it becomes a handsome, tall, strong, young man dressed in white clothes. He wears a white hat to cover his face and big nose. He is a charming man who goes to parties and looks for beautiful young women. He invites the ladies for a walk around the river bank where they make love and he usually gets them pregnant. The next morning, he turns into a pink dolphin again.

Curupira

Curupira is a creature with bright red hair(1). Curupira has a very unique quality: his feet are turned backwards(2). According to the legend, he lives in the forests of Brazil and protects nature in his own way. Curupira uses its backward feet to create footprints that confuse hunters and travelers by leading them to its starting point.
